Germany, the only European country to have been defeated in the war, was forced to sign a peace treaty with the Soviet Union, the United States, Great Britain, and France. The treaty, known as the Potsdam Declaration, was signed in August 1945. It required Germany to accept full responsibility for its actions during the war and to renounce its claims to the territories it had occupied. The treaty also stipulated that Germany was to be divided into four zones of occupation, one for each of the four victorious powers. The Soviet Union's zone of occupation was in the east, and the United States, Great Britain, and France's zones were in the west. The city of Berlin, which was located in the Soviet zone, was also divided into four sectors. The Soviet sector was in the east, and the sectors of the United States, Great Britain, and France were in the west. The division of Germany and Berlin into four zones of occupation was a direct result of the Yalta Conference, where the four victorious powers had agreed to divide Germany into four zones of occupation.
